5. Evaluation Results

Based on the analysis of the webinar evaluation survey<sup>5</sup>, inputs collected during interactive session and exercises, brainstorming ideas, Q&A discussions, and follow-up conversations, we have organized the evaluation of the workshop and into two sections, namely to demonstrate:

- 1. What the participants learned based on their feedback
- 2. What we learned

5.1 What the participants learned based on their feedback

Based on 98 responses out of 202 participants

The introduction of tools and websites on OER and the home task stimulating participants from the beginning to start thinking about how they could use OER in their own courses. The key takeaways for participants were understanding the Creative Commons licenses, how and where to look for and share OER, using the quality criteria to check whether the material is useful for their course, using the slides of the webinar in the future for the overview of tools, and getting inspired by examples from the experts and other participants.

In this webinar, we asked the participants to evaluate the workshop and also evaluate themselves in term of Personal Reflection, Research – gathering documents, integrating OER into their teaching. The detailed answers can be found in Appendix 3.

Positive aspects mentioned by the participants were that the webinar was inspirational, the number of examples given. Participants also enjoyed the stimulating self-reflection on possibilities of OER in their own courses.

Positive aspects regarding the setup of the webinar were the sharing of the slides during the webinar, a clear and simple structure, enough interaction, and good facilitation by the experts. The key takeaways for participants were "prefer and use OER", where to search for OER, different licenses, barriers for using OER, and how to overcome these barriers. Other takeaways were to enroll participants for 2 hour MOOC on understanding the concept of OER.

In this webinar, we asked: "Why OER should be used in education?" The answers were as follows:

- ↓ Cutting costs for both institutions and students
- ♣ Fair use
- ♣ Easy access
- Saving time
- ↓ Using OER in the flipped classroom and with a focus on interaction
- ♣ Approving quality of (your own) materials
- ♣ Possibility to build on the work of others
- ♣ Inspiration

5.2 What we learned

Based on 98 responses out of 202 participants

We have learned the following lessons:

Inter-university cooperation is very important: It is highly beneficial to make an OER
Cell which consists of team of information specialists and experts to work together on such initiatives.

- From the very beginning, the organizers should set clear expectations, context, and goals for the target audience(s).
- Planning is of utmost importance here: More time should be reserved for webinar preparation and communication with participants.
- It is highly advised to proactively involve every communication channel and not to expect the target audience to find you.
- In terms of advertising the workshop, inter university communication is very effective and personalized emails to one's network.
- The information presented in the workshops should remain relevant to such a varied audience representing all faculties across the different disciplines. It is important to address participants' fields of work and areas of interest from the registration forms.
- When planning the home assignments, more time should be scheduled and, ideally, subject specialists should be engaged.
- Participants have to understand OERs flexibility so that they can choose their learning trajectories and courses thereby selecting their path in life according to their talents and interest.
- The participants came to know that almost everything on lectures, lessons, and videos even the entire course which can be found online at low or minimal cost is available in the OER platform.
- It is important to prepare a detailed lesson plan with links and responsibilities, along with the backup plan of what can be skipped (prioritize interactive moments).
- Post-webinar interaction is equally important for instance, asking any difficulty during the webinar, sending an email with useful resources, promoting OER-related events etc.
- It is beneficial to share the experience, materials, and approaches with other institutions interested in setting up their own OER workshops.
- There is a strong need for revision in OER policy, as well as rewards and recognition that would help and motivate the faculty in the long run.
- To develop resources in the form of OERs in Hindi, so that we can share them with other states also.
- There is a need for faculty-specific workshops on OER targeting a narrower subject group.
- Concerns about the quality and searching of OER content should be addressed more extensively.
- General copyright knowledge and awareness are quite low among teachers and should also be addressed separately.
- Many of the teachers who participated in the webinar were already associated with the Open and Distance Learning (ODL) and need not be additionally convinced on OER. They are the "early adopters" searching for innovations in their teaching and opportunities associated with OER.

6. Conclusion

The interactive format of workshop worked extremely well and allowed us to build a great amount of involvement among the attendees. Discussing OER in a broader context also facilitated deeper modes of engagement and more constructive interaction. Additionally, the feedback we provided had concrete and direct results.

In short, the workshops were a success - yet they also underscored the importance of continued support in this initial phase: almost all the feedback we received indicated time is a precious resource for participants and they need high levels of support to find, use and create OER.

Information, tools, platforms and sufficient manpower to offer direct support to academics is a necessity, particularly in this initial phase. Though some of this can be done locally, with properly equipped support staff providing help at the university or even the faculty level, our capacity is currently limited as well, and broader institutional or external support is needed to bring OER to the next level.
